No time to stand still, even though you might think the state budget would dictate such a move. Our faculty and students continue to thrive with the help of alumni donations, grants/contracts, and clinical work.

Students
1. We recently received word that Leigh McLaughlin, a third-year DPT student, has been awarded the prestigious Mary McMillan Scholarship from the American Physical Therapy Association. (See story on page 3).
2. Our first DPT student working on a dual degree in the School of Public Health's program in Maternal and Child Health (Rachel Wachter) is preparing to graduate.
3. We have two more students, April Fay and Cari Eicher, finishing our Multiple Sclerosis Curriculum. Their predecessors, Erica Byrne Gaskins (DPT '10) and Melissa Mahon (DPT '10), recently passed the Multiple Sclerosis Certified Specialist exam, the final step in a certification process sponsored by the Consortium of Multiple Sclerosis Centers (CMSC). As the preeminent professional organization for MS health care providers, the CMSC developed the certification to formally recognize the specialized body of knowledge that is necessary to provide optimal care for individuals and families living with MS.
4. One of our PhD students, Lt. Colonel Donald Goss, has gained recognition along with his advisor Mike Gross, PT, PhD, FAPTA, for their work on barefoot running.

Faculty
1. We are very excited that Jon Hacke, PT, MA, OCS, has received the prestigious 2012 Distinguished Teaching Award for Post-Baccalaureate Instruction from UNC Chapel Hill. (See story page 2).
2. Mike Lewek, PT, PhD, has received his first NIH grant to study asymmetries in gait following stroke. In the competitive funding environment at NIH this is a great accomplishment for Mike. (See story page 3).
3. Karen McCulloch, PT, PhD, NCS, has received funding as an Oak Ridge Institute for Science and Education (ORISE) fellow through the Rehabilitation and Reintegration Division (R2D) of the Army Office of the Surgeon General. McCulloch offers consultation on issues related to mTBI as directed by Army leadership. This can include the instruction of therapist providers about mTBI, the development of standards of care when a concussion is suspected, and the development of research capacity focused on mTBI.
4. Mike Gross, PT, PhD, FAPTA, has developed a series of on-line continuing education courses that are being offered by the Division to help alumni and other physical therapists. (See story on page 3).

We were also thrilled to learn that Charlene (Billie) Nelson, PT, MA, has been selected as a Catherine Worthingham Fellow of the American Physical Therapy Association. (See story page 3). Congratulations, Billie!

Have a great summer,

Rick Segal, PT, PhD, FAPTA
Director and Professor
Hacke Receives Distinguished Teaching Award

Division of Physical Therapy Assistant Professor Jon Hacke, PT, MA, OCS, has received the 2012 Distinguished Teaching Award for Post-Baccalaureate Instruction from UNC Chapel Hill. Established by the University in 1995 to acknowledge the important role of graduate-level teaching, this prestigious award includes a cash stipend and framed citation. Recipients of the 2012 award were recognized during a half-time ceremony at the UNC-Virginia men’s basketball game on February 11, and were honored at an awards banquet in April.

Current UNC physical therapy students were not surprised to hear that Hacke had been recognized for his exceptional teaching and mentoring.

“In every way, Jon Hacke represents all that is good with the education system,” said third-year DPT student Mary Murray. “He not only leads by example, but goes above and beyond by taking on additional duties, spending extra hours for individual tutoring, providing exceptional clinical services to patients, and sacrificing evenings to provide hands-on learning experiences at SHAC. Jon is approachable, caring, and seeks to improve his students weaknesses while maximizing their individual strengths. He is an excellent example of professionalism that we can all strive for. Not only does Jon inspire me to be a better clinician, he inspires me to be a better person.”

Hacke has over 31 years of clinical experience in outpatient orthopedics. He earned his BS in physical education from the University of Montana, Missoula, in 1976 and his BS in physical therapy and MA in physical education with national certification in athletic training from UNC Chapel Hill in 1980. Hacke joined the UNC Physical Therapy faculty in 1995 and teaches courses in physical therapy modalities, manual therapy, and orthopedic rehabilitation. His research interests include rehabilitation of the sacro-iliac, lumbar/cervical spine regions as well as sports injuries, particularly injuries of the knee and shoulder.

Lewek Awarded NIH Grant to Continue Research on Improving Stroke Survivors’ Ability to Walk

UNC Physical Therapy Assistant Professor Michael Lewek, PT, PhD, has received a $400,000 NIH R21 grant to continue work studying ways to help stroke survivors’ improve their ability to walk. Lewek initially pursued this line of research with the help of a NC TraCS $10,000 pilot grant.

Lewek is collaborating with Fred Brooks, Jr., PhD, Kenan Distinguished Professor; Mary Whitton, MS, research associate professor; and Jeff Feasel, MS, graduate research assistant, in UNC’s Department of Computer Science, as well as Heather Walker, MD, from the Department of Physical Medicine and Rehabilitation.

Their work is testing two contrasting motor learning theories to find out the best way to rehabilitate people who have had stroke and restore their ability to walk symmetrically. Stroke survivors often experience partial or full paralysis on one side of the body. Regaining the ability to walk involves a long and arduous rehabilitation process, and walking often remains slow, with an asymmetrical gait pattern that may be energy inefficient. In fact, walking after stroke can require as much as 40 percent more metabolic energy contributing to reduced endurance.

Using a programmable split-belt treadmill with sides that can speed up or slow down separately, Lewek and colleagues are testing whether it is more effective to have the treadmill automatically correct a person’s gait, or to have the treadmill amplify errors so that the person’s brain learns through the process of self-correction. The researchers’ hypothesis is that self-correction leads to better motor learning. Lewek likens it to children learning to ride bicycles using training wheels.

“When they have training wheels, it forces them upright,” he said. “Then you bend the training wheels up and they start to wobble a little bit. They have to be able to experience those errors to learn what ‘straight’ is.”

During the two-year project, the researchers hope to enroll 54 participants who have suffered stroke. They are also resubmitting an application for an NIH R01 award that would allow them to test these theories in a virtual environment where participants receive visual feedback about their walking to guide them in self-correction of their gait. They have already developed and conducted preliminary testing with the virtual environment, published a description, and presented it at national conferences.

Lewek and his collaborators are currently recruiting people who are post-stroke to participate in the study. For more information or to schedule an appointment, please contact Mike Lewek at (919) 966-9732 or strokegait@med.unc.edu.

Billie Nelson Named Worthingham Fellow

Charlene (Billie) Nelson, PT, MA, has been selected as a Catherine Worthingham Fellow of the American Physical Therapy Association (APTA), the highest honor among APTA’s membership categories.

The Catherine Worthingham Fellow designation (FAPTA) recognizes physical therapists whose contributions to the profession through leadership, influence, and achievements demonstrate frequent and sustained efforts to advance the profession for a period of not less than 15 years preceding the nomination for election.

“Billie has been influential in physical therapy for most of the 60 years she has been a member of APTA,” UNC PT Division Director and Professor Rick Segal said in his letter nominating Nelson for the honor. “Her record of contributions to the advancement of physical therapy in many areas is amazingly sustained and exemplary. She has carefully shaped the teaching and practice of electrophysiologic PT and successfully advocated for its place in the profession and society.”

Nelson joined the UNC Chapel Hill Division of PT in 1961 and is now an Emeritus Associate Professor who continues to actively support the division. Throughout her career and even after her retirement from UNC, Nelson played a pivotal role in the development and acceptance of electrotherapy and electrodiagnostics.

DPT Student Wins APTA’s Mary McMillan Scholarship

Leigh Anne McLaughlin, a third-year UNC Doctor of Physical Therapy student from Fayetteville, NC, has been selected to receive the Mary McMillan Scholarship Award from the American Physical Therapy Association (APTA). The intent of the award is to recognize students who exhibit superior scholastic ability and potential for future professional contribution.

The award includes a $5,000 scholarship and a certificate that will be presented by APTA’s Board of Directors at the association’s annual conference. An official announcement of the award will also appear in an association publication.

UNC PT had previously recognized McLaughlin’s excellence and potential by selecting her to receive the 2010-11 Charlotte Money Beatty Memorial Scholarship, the 2010-11 Judy White Professional Development Award, and the 2011-12 James and Evelyn Fowler Physical Therapy Loyalty Fund Annual Scholarship. She recently helped lead the student efforts to raise funds for the 2012 UNC PT Outreach trip to Guatemala. “I entered the profession of physical therapy with a desire to help others achieve their highest quality of life and mobility,” said McLaughlin in the personal statement she wrote after receiving the Fowler Scholarship. “I aspire to build a career as a pediatric physical therapist and hope to make a difference in the lives of high risk infants and toddlers and those with developmental disabilities. I also hope to broaden my horizons through service trips abroad and in rural North Carolina providing help to those with less than adequate access to healthcare.”

In the late 1970s, Nelson helped lead a group of PTs and PT advocates protesting rules by the Joint Commission on Accreditation of Hospitals that required PTs to be supervised by physicians for electrodiagnostic services. After their compelling arguments helped reverse the rules, Nelson focused her attention on establishing rigorous training and guidelines for the field. She became a member and Chair of the Section Task Force on Electro-neuromyographic Competencies and Specialization, which ultimately resulted in the creation of the Specialty Council of Clinical Electrophysiologic Physical Therapy. In 1989, 38 years after becoming a PT, Nelson passed the specialty exam and became an Electrophysiologic Clinical Specialist (ECS).

Among other honors, Nelson received APTA’s Lucy Blair Service Award in 1981 and was selected to deliver the North Carolina Physical Therapy Association (NCPTA) Founders Lecture in 1997.

Online CEU Courses from UNC PT

The UNC Chapel Hill Division of Physical Therapy is now offering on-line continuing education courses. The currently offered courses are authored by Michael T. Gross, PT, PhD, FAPTA, and cover the biomechanical properties of the musculoskeletal tissues.

The courses are all approved for continuing education credit by the North Carolina Board of Physical Therapy Examiners and range in length from 1 to 2.75 contact hours for individual courses in the series, with the possibility that all courses in the series can be taken at a reduced price for 14.75 hours of contact credit.

UNC PT students, faculty, and alumni traveled to Guatemala in late April for the third annual UNC PT Outreach service learning project. Initiated in 2010, UNC PT Outreach aims to meet the needs of underserved populations while increasing cultural competence among future PTs. As in previous years, the UNC group worked with the patients and staff at Obras Sociales del Hermano Pedro, a facility in Antigua that provides a home and care for people of all ages who are mentally or physically challenged or chronically ill.

The 2012 trip was the first to include UNC PT alumni. Amanda Niles ('05), Catherine Noonan ('10), and Darcy Little ('11) joined faculty members Sadye Paez Errickson, Lisa Johnston, and Katie Ollendick, and students Katherine Culver, Christina Gray, Aisha Jones, Leigh McLaughlin, Nikki Oladele, Derrick O’Neal, Samantha Price, and Amanda Reed. Noonan and Little had participated in previous PT Outreach trips to Guatemala as students. For more information and photos, visit uncptoutreach.blogspot.com.
