

CONFERENCES & MEETINGS

Medicine Grand Rounds is on hiatus for the summer.

FROM DIVISIONS

- The Health Sciences Library now offers free access to RefWorks, an online bibliographic management and formatting program. It can be used to centralize and organize your research information, create searchable citation databases, and insert citations into word processing documents. For more information, visit www.hsl.unc.edu/Services/Guides.

ANNOUNCEMENTS

- The Also from the Health Sciences Library, PubMed now features RSS 2.0 feeds, allowing PubMed to update you automatically with newly published material that meets your individualized search criteria. ## FROM THE CHAIR'S OFFICE

Last week, I asked for your input about the newsletter. Your comments have been helpful, and in the coming months I'll be writing about many of the topics you suggested. We will put these together and provide you with an idea of the topics that were mentioned and, hopefully, this may even stimulate some additional suggestions. I want to thank those of you who responded with ideas. I very much appreciate your interest and feedback.

One comment that came up had to do with the "Announcements" section. Some of you commented on inconsistencies in this part of the newsletter. Sometimes very important news is not commented upon, and comparatively minor events are reported at other times. I do think that we can do better. What I'd like to propose is simple, and I think we can make it work: anyone who gets the newsletter may contact Jeremy Powell via email with news about important goings-on in the department. Our goal will be to focus on information about happenings and opportunities that impact the Department in important ways. Upcoming conferences, special lectures, major awards - that sort of thing. But we do want to make sure important information doesn't get missed, and for that, all we need is a little bit of effort from everyone.

We can't guarantee that every item will make the "Announcements" section, but if you will take the time to provide us with this important information, the newsletter will better serve all of us.

More next week and, again, thanks.
