

Employee Resource Groups

An Opportunity to Make a Difference

What is an Employee Resource Group?

Employee Resource Groups connect employees who want to create a culture of inclusion that focuses on patient satisfaction, employee engagement, recruitment, and retention and supports our Mission, Vision, and Values. Employee Resource Groups form around such common interests as military service, cultural background, ethnicity, gender, sexual orientation, generations, religious beliefs, disability status, or age.

What Does an Employee Resource Group do?

Employee Resource Group programs focus on a variety of employee and patient care matters, such as, addressing access issues for patient communities, building diverse candidate pools, cultural competency training, and celebrating our similarities and differences.

Employee Resource Groups are coming to UNC Health Care and UNC School of Medicine
