

CHAPEL HILL, NORTH CAROLINA
DIGITAL PHOTOGRAPH

As I hurried down the empty hospital hallway, the red exit sign caught my eyes. Leaving the hospital after a long shift is a relief, but how does it feel for the patients leaving without a clear diagnosis for their lifelong pain? For the caregivers who will return the next day, just as they have done for weeks or months? For friends and families who have paid their last visit to a loved one?

a b o u t • a r t i s t

KIM

Jiwoo Lisa Kim is a third-year medical student at the UNC School of Medicine. She earned her Bachelor of Science in Biology from Duke University, where she also conducted research on neural circuits of sensory perception, with a focus on pain. Her academic interests include pain perception and management. Outside of medicine, Jiwoo enjoys taking photographs, both for personal joymen and for publications.

---

© 2024 Iris: The art and literary journal, UNC School of Medicine