

UNC Department of Radiology Global Health Leadership Pathway

Advancing health equity through education, collaboration, and innovation

Global Health Leadership Pathway Journal Club Mission

The purpose of the Global Health Leadership Pathway (GHLP) journal club is to have direct interaction with the global health faculty, to develop mentorship relationships with the GHLP faculty, to increase knowledge about global health by considering current literature, and to learn together in a safe space.

The GHLP journal club is open to faculty, staff, residents, and medical students of the UNC Department of Radiology.

Guidelines

These guidelines and structure have been created to support the mission of this journal club:

- GHLP journal club is held quarterly and is listed on the resident conference schedule.
- GHLP residents are expected to attend this journal club, but it is open to all residents.
- All residents and individuals that attend GHLP journal club are expected to read the article and to participate.
- Respectful and constructive dialogue will be used during GHLP journal club.

Structure

- GHLP journal club is in a discussion, roundtable format (not a lecture style). We will have a facilitated discussion with active learning in which all members contribute.
- For example, we will use the “think, pair, share” methodology and other Socratic methods of discussion.
- In “think, pair, share”, members will be put into pairs within the group. Each pair will be given a question. Initially, the members within the pair will consider the question quietly themselves. Then, they will discuss their thoughts with the other individual in their pair. Finally, the pair will share their combined response with the group.