

UNC
SCHOOL OF MEDICINE

Building a Learning Health Care Culture: Lessons from Pediatric Oncology

Pediatric oncology is often held up as the model for learning healthcare systems to emulate. There is much truth—but also a few cautionary notes—in this view. This presentation will describe how pediatric oncology has created a learning healthcare culture, one on which other areas of pediatrics and medicine can build as they seek to improve both knowledge and care.

Steven Joffe, MD, MPH
Medical Ethics,
University of Pennsylvania

April 4th

12:15 to 1:30 pm

321 MacNider Hall

Joint Lecture Series

Children's
Research Institute
&
Center for Bioethics

