Teaching Responsibility

I have teaching responsibilities in both the School of Medicine and the Department of Anthropology, in the College of Arts and Sciences. Approximately 50% of my time is spent in teaching and related activities. In the School of Medicine, I teach undergraduate medical students in the year-long course, Medicine & Society (1982 –present Now Social and Health Systems 1-2), and a one semester selective seminar in the Humanities and Social Sciences (Now Social and Health Systems 3) on Families, Health, and Illness (1983-1990), and Deviance and Disability (1991 - present). I co-teach in SHS 4, the Intensive Integration curriculum a seminar focused on ethics, critical reflection, and humanities in medicine for clerkship students. From 1989-1999 I was course director for the Selective Seminars in Humanities and Social Sciences, and from 2000 to 2001, 2007-2010 I was co course director, and am currently course director for Medicine and Society. I was a member of the core curriculum faculty for the Robert Wood Johnson Clinical Scholars Program, and taught several seminars per year. I also worked individually with Clinical Scholars on their research projects, and with other core faculty on social science curriculum development (1983 - 2003). I teach on occasion in the Department of Psychiatry's seminar for residents in social and community psychiatry. I was a core faculty member for an NIMH funded post doctoral training program focused on multidisciplinary services research, and supervised and collaborated with fellows in that program. Since 1982, I have supervised 22 medical students for elective work. I have been an advisor for 25 medical students and Schweitzer Fellowship advisor for 3 students. I also work with Preventive Medicine Residents on their research. In 1983-84, I taught residents in Pediatrics as a part of the Social Medicine curriculum. In the College of Arts and Sciences, I teach both undergraduate students (Anthropology 170, Anthropology and Medicine), and graduate students (Anthropology 250, Advanced Topics in Medical Anthropology, and Anthropology 252, Transcultural Psychiatry) when funding is available. I have given guest lectures in undergraduate honors courses since 2008. I teach a graduate course in Anthropology when time and resources permit. (1982 - present). I have taught intensive qualitative methods seminars at: University of Leipzig, Indiana University, Columbia University, and Tokyo University. In addition, I offer independent reading courses to graduate students. I serve or have served on the following M.A. and Ph.D. committees:
